Subject: PMTF Update #13, June 23 - No Fishing

All,

Both vessels got into Port Moller in the early hours this morning after being pounded on the trip in, and are now at anchor. Winds on the transect today are gusting into the mid-40s. Tomorrow does not look great, but it is expected to at least “begin” to lie down over the course of tomorrow.

We will develop a plan for tomorrow after this evening’s forecast and a discussion among our skippers of what, if anything can be done or attempted tomorrow.

Amazingly great coverage of station-days and the stock composition results so far this year, despite Murphy’s Law and early high catches. A serious “shout out” to the those on the two vessels and in the two gene labs (Anchorage and Ocean Cat). What a team.
